

BARRIERS TO REPORTING SEXUAL HARASSMENT AND VIOLENCE

Barriers to reporting safely and without retaliation include:

I can't afford to lose my job.	I'm afraid of losing my residency status.	I'm worried about being labeled as "difficult."
English is not my first language, so the paperwork is overwhelming.	I don't know who to tell.	I'm new to Canada and I don't know how this works and I already get teased at work.
It's a boys' club and they don't get it.	I don't trust my supervisor.	I reported it but was told it was just "inappropriate behaviour."
		Nothing will be done anyway.

It's your choice whether to report.

If you choose to report, you have the right to be accompanied by a support person, like a friend, family member, spouse/partner, colleague, or union representative.

Employers can overcome reporting barriers by creating a culture where it's OK for people to talk openly about harassment and violence. Best practices include:

Having a comprehensive policy with clear reporting procedures and expectations.

Having multiple forms of reporting (formal and informal).

Having multiple options for reporting.
